Adam Griffin helps companies respond to high-stakes cybersecurity incidents, guiding them through some of their most critical and sensitive business challenges. He regularly leads complex investigations arising from incidents including ransomware attacks, business email compromise, vendor breaches, data leaks and insider threats.

Adam is frequently the first call for “bet-the-company” incidents requiring immediate, coordinated action. Serving as a central coordinator for multidisciplinary response teams, Adam ensures a robust response under intense pressure. Clients rely on him to manage incidents from initial containment through investigation, notification and potential litigation. He advises on regulatory investigations and notification obligations across jurisdictions, interfacing with regulators and coordinating global disclosure strategies. Adam regularly counsels private equity sponsors and their portfolio companies on incident response and related regulatory and business risks.

In addition to incident response, Adam counsels clients on data privacy and security issues, including vendor management, policy development, regulatory compliance, proactive incident response planning, and audit and investigation oversight. He also assists with negotiating cyber risk issues in technology contracts.

Working with clients across industries, Adam is well versed in federal, state and international privacy laws and regulations. He collaborates with the technology and data security professionals within organizations to ensure incident response preparedness.

A frequent speaker on cybersecurity and privacy topics at conferences, trainings and seminars across the U.S., Adam brings technical fluency and the ability to translate complex cybersecurity matters into clear, actionable guidance for his clients.
