Jason Walton has spent more than 20 years advising clients on tax and energy matters, with a practice focused on renewable energy transactions and tax credit investments. He regularly structures and closes transactions designed to generate federal and state tax credits, guiding clients through the full lifecycle of tax credit investments — from deal formation through capital deployment. Clients value his practical approach and his ability to align complex tax structures with business objectives.

Jason's work is rooted in the projects themselves. He advises investors and sponsors on transactions that support the construction and financing of projects generating tax credits, with an eye toward both near-term tax efficiency and long-term project success. Clients appreciate his commitment to maximizing not only available tax credits, but the overall impact and viability of the project.

In addition to tax credit transactions, Jason advises on the tax aspects of project development and financing structures across a vast range of energy and infrastructure projects.
