Jessica Linse is a litigation attorney who focuses on commercial and business litigation as well as regulatory matters. She represents clients in complex disputes in state and federal courts and has experience resolving matters through alternative dispute resolution, including mediation and arbitration.

Jessica's regulatory experience includes regularly appearing before state and federal agencies, handling contested case hearings, enforcement actions, and administrative record development to position matters for favorable outcomes and, when necessary, judicial review. Jessica has also represented the largest investor-owned water and wastewater companies in base rate cases before the New Jersey Board of Public Utilities and in other regulatory proceedings.

In addition, Jessica's practice includes ERISA-related litigation, where she represents clients in disputes involving employee benefit plans and fiduciary obligations. She works with clients through all phases of litigation, from early case assessment and investigation through resolution, helping them manage risk and navigate high-stakes disputes efficiently and strategically.

While in law school, Jessica served as a mediator in the Landlord-Tenant Mediation Program, where she facilitated negotiations and drafted settlement agreements during active litigation proceedings.
