Joshua Lovejoy supports health care operations matters for hospitals, health systems and other health care organizations. He assists with research, drafting and analysis related to regulatory, operational and compliance issues, helping teams address the legal considerations that arise in day-to-day health care delivery.

Before joining Polsinelli, Joshua served as a legal intern with Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's Office of General Counsel. His background also includes legal research and drafting on health care policy, bioethics, public health advocacy and the social determinants of health. His undergraduate and graduate studies in biochemistry and bioethics provide a technical foundation for his work with health care organizations.
