Matt blends a deep technical background with legal acumen to help clients protect and maximize their intellectual property. His practice focuses on patent prosecution, acquisition, maintenance and enforcement. He works across industries to ensure that companies safeguard their innovations and maintain a competitive edge. Matt is also experienced in managing patent and trademark portfolios, guiding businesses through the complex process of commercializing their intellectual property.

Before becoming a patent attorney, Matt was a software and systems engineer at EMC Corp and Hitachi, where he focused on data storage technologies. This engineering experience gives him a unique perspective on the technical challenges clients face, allowing him to offer legal strategies grounded in real-world understanding.

Matt has successfully represented clients in high-profile patent infringement cases involving a range of technologies. He is also skilled in post-grant proceedings, including inter partes reviews and reexaminations before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO).

Matthew's commitment to his clients is reflected in his ability to deliver tailored solutions that align with both their legal needs and business objectives. His combined technical and legal experience makes him a trusted advisor in the evolving landscape of intellectual property.
